

Malala: My Story of Standing Up for Girls' Rights

(Young Readers Edition, 2021)

Malala was born in Pakistan in 1997. She loved going to school, but some people said girls should not study. Malala believed this was unfair. She spoke loudly for girls' right to learn.

When she was only fifteen, Malala was attacked for her brave words. She survived and became even stronger. She continued to share her message. "One child, one teacher, one book, one pen can change the world."

Malala won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2014. Today, she travels the world, helping children, especially girls to go to school and follow their dreams.
